Dropped packets in *.seattle.wa.ibone.comcast.net servers in the mornings?

 Official Reply

Over the past couple of weeks, I have been having great difficulty - particularly in the hours of 9am to 11am or so - keeping a reliable connection to the remote desktop I connect to at work in the Seattle area (connecting from an area near Portland, OR).

I ran tracert and I see that when this is happening, seattle ibone servers such as:

be-36211-cs01.seattle.wa.ibone.comcast.net

Consistently are dropping packets, and appear to be the cause of this problem.

Is there any way someone could look at those servers and see if something is amiss? It's hard for me to get work done with the packet loss I'm experiencing as my packets move from the troutdale.or.bverton.comcast.net servers to the seattle.wa.ibone.comcast.net servers.

Unfortunately not - in the time it took for me to get account access needed for support to assist me, the issue appeared to resolve itself so the support ticket was cancelled. I haven't personally experienced the issue again since that situation, but I also moved to a different location so my traffic may be routing differently now.
